

MORE COVID RESTRICTIONS

At a four-month high of infections, with 1,100 new cases diagnosed on Sunday and 60 patients in serious condition, Israel canceled a plan to allow in tourists after August 1 and added more destinations to a list of banned countries or countries Israelis are warned from visiting.

Israelis returning from such countries now need to quarantine for at least a week even if they are fully vaccinated or recovered, and a four-to-seven-day quarantine will likely be slapped on returnees from all countries.

"This isn't the time to travel abroad for non-essential flights," Health Ministry CEO Nachman Ash warned in reaction to reports that 37,000 travelers left Israel on Monday. He predicted an increase to 2,000 daily cases within two weeks and 30 new serious cases a day. Currently, the number of serious cases in Israel is almost at a standstill.

Foreigners with first degree relatives in Israel can still apply online for permission to visit, but need to comply with the rules. Otherwise, they may suffer the fate of a US couple, Oded and Paulina Gonen, who arrived at Ben Gurion with all the 12 documents they required except one and were sent back immediately.

RESTRICTIONS ON INDOOR EVENTS

Israel imposed restrictions on indoor events with more than 100 participants, limiting them to individuals carrying "Happy Badges" to certify that they are immune. Hall owners who flout the rules will be subject to fines of $1,500. Israel may extend a similar "green pass" system to shops, restaurants, and other indoor venues, but does not plan to impose a lockdown on the public except, possibly, over the yomim tovim.

Religious Affairs Minister Matan Kahana issued an assurance that whatever happens, shuls will not be discriminated against as they were in former waves, saying, "If 50 people are permitted to enter theaters, the same will apply to shuls."

Chief Rabbi Yitzchok Yosef announced prior to Tisha B'Av that people should be stricter than the government requires, hurrying to get vaccinated if necessary and avoiding simchos as much as possible. He added that shuls should arrange small minyoni and that Kinos should be kept short.

PM Bennett initially tried to talk the public into a contract of trust, saying that with voluntary cooperation, the virus could be vanquished in five weeks. But he soon tired of this game and announced a significant increase in enforcement, stating, "I want to say here clearly: Government decisions are not recommendations; they are binding. Whoever flouts them will pay."

Disobeying quarantine rules has been made a criminal offense and Attorney General Avichai Mandelblit is investigating the legal ramification of tracking quarantined people via their phones.

As usual, the health establishment is anxious to make ever more restrictions while the political establishment is fearful that limitations might lead to another wrecking of the economy.

SECRET AGREEMENT WITH PZIFER

Israel ordered enough vaccines from Pfizer for its current needs and reached a secret agreement with the company to receive immediate extra shipments if it decides to administer booster third shots on an extensive scale.

At present, only people with depressed immune systems are getting booster shots.

LIEBERMAN OPPOSES UMAN ROSH HASHANAH

With tens of thousands of travelers entering Israel every day, Finance Minister Avigdor Lieberman is anxious to limit the number of people visiting Uman over Rosh Hashanah lest they bring the virus to Israel. Health Minister Nitzan Horowitz subscribes to his point of view.

MK Moshe Arbel of Shas wrote to Ukrainian President Vladimir Zelinski, asking him to ignore Lieberman and noting that the Israeli government has no real legitimacy.

Hundreds of Breslov chassidim have already traveled to Uman just in case.

HAARETZ ATTACKS CHAREIDIM AGAIN

Even though chareidim are little affected by Israel's fourth Covid wave, Haaretz cartoonist Amos Biederman saw fit to issue another anti-chareidi cartoon.

This one depicts two policemen viewing the crowded Kosel plaza on Tisha B'Av with one asking the other, "Is it okay that they're so crowded?" and getting the answer, in reference to the badge required to enter indoor events of over 100 people, "They got a Happy Badge for Tisha B'Av."

GOVERNMENT UNVEILS KASHRUS FREE-FOR-ALL

Religious Services Minister Matan Kahana announced that kashrus supervision will no longer be limited to official city rabbinates, but divided among private kashrus bodies and put on a strict business footing.

Subject to Kahana's reform passing a Knesset vote, private bodies will supervise kashrus subject to rules established by the Chief Rabbinate, with any three town rabbonim recognized by the Chief Rabbinate having the option of adopt more basic standards if they see fit.

The system will enable any individual to create a private kashrus supervision and push long existing hashgochas out of business.

Kahana claims that the system will regulate kashrus standards and remove the need for mehadrin restaurants to pay for Rabbinate supervision as well. He said the resultant competition will lower the price of kosher food, streamline the process, improve the working conditions of mashgichim, and eradicate corruption.

Finance Minister Avigdor Lieberman enthusiastically approved the move, saying it will "reduce the burden on local food producers and caterers" and save consumers millions of shekels a year.

The Chief Rabbinate slammed the reform, saying it was part of "a war against religious services" whose "goal is to cancel the Jewish identity of the State of Israel." In addition, the Rabbinate said, the bill's true aim was "the abolition of kashrus in the State of Israel" by creating a free-for-all for anyone interested in granting certification in line with their business interests.

MK Moshe Gafni of UTJ also denounced the program, saying Kahana "seeks to eradicate any spark of Judaism" in Israel.
